World Mental Health Day

"Mental health problems can affect anyone, any day of the year, but 10 October is a great day to show your support for better mental health and start looking after your own wellbeing." (mind.org)

The Pastoral Team encourages you to take some time to think about your mental wellbeing and how you can support others too. Together they have come up with some suggestions on how you can get involved in #doonething.

Mel, the school counsellor, would like to challenge everyone to do one act of kindness this weekend. Write it on a piece of paper with your name on, or anonymously, and put it in the 'act of kindness post box' next week. The post box is outside Mr Hooper's office.

Mrs Ellison would like everyone to spend some time this weekend reflecting on their use of social media. How do you use social media positively – maybe to stay in touch with friends and share news? Are there any ways social media impacts negatively on your life or those of others? Can you change your habits to focus on the positive aspects and send one positive message to someone else.

Mrs Jobling suggests over the weekend you go out to do something active and try to link it in with being kind to the environment.

The Rev. and the Head will be picking up on the theme of Mental Wellbeing next week in Chapel and Whole School Assembly.

Whatever you decide to do this weekend, we hope you will find time for the things you love and time for your friends and family.

Covid Bulletin

The Truro School Covid Steering Group is a committee that meets weekly and is made up of school leaders, medical, academic, pastoral, boarding, business, technological, and facilities experts. Its role is to review and make ongoing recommendations to optimise the School's approach to living and learning within the pandemic.

There will be a weekly bulletin from this group with the latest updates, and there is a dedicated page on the website under the Parents tab.

Black History Month

This month is Black History Month, and the library team have put together a recommended reads list which you can find on page 5. Test your knowledge with a Black History quiz which can be found here. Competition entry details can be found on the Truro School news page.

Additionally, the library is pleased to introduce a new click and collect service via a link to minimise the number of pupils in the library area at any one time. Launching Monday 12 October, pupils will be able to request a specific book, or let the librarians choose based on what the child's previously read. Don't forget the full library catalogue can be found on RUnify.

Charlotte's magazine cover

Over summer, Waitrose held a national competition seeking an illustrated cover for their food magazine.

Inspired, Charlotte set about creating her cream tea picture.

She explained how she created her cover: "I was inspired to do this painting because I love painting in this style, and I love a cream tea. I baked some scones and set up the display. I then drew the display to get it perfect and used some watercolours on top to add some colour. The final details came next, such as outlining and adding highlights. Once all of that was done, the picture was finished."

Sixth Form student Charlotte recently found out she came runner up in a national competition.

9 OCTOBER 2020: TRURO SCHOOL NEWS AND UPDATES

An interview with Mr Andy Johnson

You may have seen in the West Briton last week that Mr Johnson was interviewed by local journalist Oli Vergnault, who is a Senior Reporter across the Cornwall papers. In case you missed it, you can read the interview below.

Andy Johnson, 46, a proud Welshman and father of two, is settling into his first head teacher role at Truro School. Oliver Vergnault met him to discover his vision for the 140-year-old school.

What's your background?

We moved to London when I was two. My mother was a teacher and my father was a taxman with the Inland Revenue although he may prefer the term civil servant. I went to a church primary school and onto an independent secondary school before reading history at Cambridge University.

What led you to becoming a teacher?

At first I considered becoming a lawyer. I was interested in problem solving and people's lives. I did some work experience with a legal aid firm as well as with a City firm. The legal aid work was more interesting. Again it was about trying to improve other people's lives. Yet the whole teaching thing was in my head. In the end I went for it and applied for a PGCE at Trinity and All Saints College in Leeds. As part of my training I worked in Queensbury in Bradford. I come from quite an academic background but recognised then that teaching is not just about academics. It is about practical skills, working with people, and developing all their abilities. It is about communication. It was challenging but an amazing experience too.

Where was your first teaching job?

It was a co-ed through-school in Berkhamsted in Hertfordshire. I taught history there for three years. I then moved to Westminster School in London where I stayed for 11 years, again teaching history, and running their residential Phab charity for disabled adults which is something I am hugely proud of. It was an amazing family to be part of, not just for the disabled adults but for the students at the school. I became housemaster before I left to help set up the London Academy of Excellence, a completely new school in Newham, East London.

How did you get involved in that project?

The head and I, as deputy, set up the London Academy of Excellence. It was a state-funded free school catering for sixth form students only in an area of London where, at that time, close to 50% of young people in Year 11 were having to leave the borough to study elsewhere for sixth form. There was a lack of sixth form provision in Newham at the time. We worked with the community, with the local council, independent and state schools in the area who were interested in supporting the project. We wanted to create a school that offered sixth form education locally. It was selective. Students needed six Bs at the GCSEs to get in. It was about giving the most ambitious young people in the area a proudly academic and ambitious Sixth Form to study at. I was there for two years and saw the first cohort of students through. They received some of the best A-levels results in the country. To this day the school remains hugely successful.

How did you end up as head of Truro School?

For five years prior to my most recent role in Cornwall, I was academic deputy head at St Dunstan College in South East London which is an independent co-educational through-school like Truro, with a similarly broad curriculum and keen bursary programme. It was quite a diverse school and a really happy place. Their motto was all about the individuals being allowed to be themselves. It is something that resonated strongly with me and my background. We have a very similar mission and ethos here.

What attracted you to Truro School?

It's a wonderful school with a strong and healthy ethos. It strives to be a beacon of inclusive excellence. It is very important to me that this continues and that we make it even more so. It's not about fostering one type of talent over another, it's about fostering all talents.

Geology at Carn Brea

This week was the turn of the 4th Year GCSE Geologists to go out on one of their first trips upon embarking their GCSE journey.

The new cohort of geologists went to Carn Brea where they discovered the solidification and hydrothermal evidence in what is a very small area.

Known as the 'cup and saucer' the millions-of-years-old rock formation has evidence of physical weathering, and features flecks of orange colour due to the mineral mica which has tiny parts of iron in.

The young geologists also looked at the crystal size in the Granite, which can be found commonly in Cornwall.

Harvest Festival

Throughout the week the collection for Truro Foodbank in the chapel has grown and grown as year groups took it in turns to drop off their donations. The food will be collected on Monday by a representative from the Truro Foodbank.

Rainbow

At the start of the week inbetween the wet autumnal weather, a rainbow appeared over Truro. Here it is captured over the transport area at the senior school, and over the grounds of the prep school.

A-Level subject breakfasts

Choosing A-Levels can be daunting and there are plenty of subjects to choose from. Luckily our Sixth Form students are on hand to advise and guide our 5th Years about specific subjects. Today was the turn of Chemistry, where the current Upper Sixth chemists spoke a bit about the course, complementing A Levels, and took questions from the keen pupils who listened intently while enjoying their Sixth Form Café breakfast- just a taster of student life at Truro School!

Old Truronian Anna Rood makes geology discovery

Old Truronian Dr Anna Rood CO13 (nee Caklais) attended Truro School from 2006-2011 and is now a Researcher at Imperial College London. As a result of her refining PhD research, her first paper has gained national media attention for its important work in the field of geology.

precariouly balanced rocks, or PBRs, are an 'inverse seismometer. A normal seismometer records an event that has happened, whereas our PBR is still standing there, and so it records an earthquake that hasn't happened. Specifically, a large earthquake," she told BBC News.

In an earthquake zone near the Diablo Canyon nuclear power plant in Southern California is a rock, precariously balanced in place for 21,000 years. The disturbance needed to unsettle such blocks is significant, which led to Anna wondering how the stones could be used to understand the history of earthquakes and why such enormous stones have yet to be unsettled from their positions.

By analysing the ages of unstable rocks and working out just how big of an earthquake would topple them, Anna and her colleagues have built a more precise picture of past earthquake behaviour in the region—and therefore what could happen in the future.
